This program contains 30 minutes of Professionalism Content. This program also qualifies for a further 1 hour of Substantive Content.

For practitioners within the family justice and child protection systems, knowing the “law” is merely half the battle. Helping clients to move away from what they want and towards what they and their children need can be the more challenging task. There is often a tension between supporting our clients and providing sound advice. However, we achieve our best win-win when litigants, kin and the Society devise reasonable, realistic and child-focused plans for placement and access. This session will focus on the difficult conversations we may need to have before our clients can engage in meaningful dispute resolution.
